Main navigation Belgium began bombing raids against Nazi Germany on the last day of World War II in May 1945. The Belgian Royal Air Force was a pretty new air force, formed in 1940. About 4,000 Belgians were trained and about 1,500 Belgians died in the first three years. The air force was pretty much exclusively used in the first half of the war, to protect airfields and move important goods. The Royal Air Force was involved in the Dyle Plan and operations around the "Fortress Europe". To protect the planes from heavy ground fire, they had secret landing strips around the country. At the end of the war, the Belgian Royal Air Force had only about 100 serviceable planes. At the end of the war, the Belgian Royal Air Force had only about 100 serviceable planes. Belgium entered World War II in 1940. The Battle of Belgium was the first significant action for the Royal Air Force of the Belgian Air Force. The German invasion ended in the Belgian retreat to the port of Antwerp. The Belgian and British air forces participated in Operation Market Garden, fighting for the liberation of the Netherlands and Belgium. The Belgian air force fought 82157476af
